(Prom the London Times, March 8.)

We seem to have arrived at that turning point of the American war which brings us, as it were, within sight of the timal seeme, and the part we shall be called on to play in it. The sinest undisputed progress of a Federal arm through Georgia and South Carolina, and the successive surreader of strongholds believed to be imprepable, at its very approach, are by no means the only signs of Couled rateexhanstion. The great maritime cities, for the defence of which such limmense sacrifices had been made, have long been occupied by miserable remnants of their former jopulation. Two months ago, as appears from the letters of our correspondent, Charleston, the very cradle of the "rebellion," was a deserted and half ruined city; the cattle pasturing, and even the partridge bringing up her Irood, in the streets. No wonder that men to do not be found to stay the progress of Sherman. Every place was under-garrisoned, and could not spare soldiers without inviting attack. Materials of all kinds were wanting. If the garrison of Fort Fisher, profiting by the experience of the first attack, had supplied themselves with two or three rifled guns of larger calibre, or had they completed the carthworks where the causeway from the river ran into the fort, or he dieve busined the services of more officers acquairted with the works than the two who fell we unded early in the affair, or had the centry carrison not bren raw recruits, then the fort ought not to have fallen; but in all these "Ifs" we read the lamentable condition of the Confederate cause. The men, the guns, the officers, the labor were simply not fortheoning, and without them forts caunot be held nor battles won. Energy, and even confidence, it is said, are also on the decline. The Carolinas and their Southern neighbors showed the true southern temperament at the outbreak of the struggle, when Virginia held back; but it is such punishments as the court may impose, and no application for elemency will be entertained What is still more remarkable is that the Rich mord Dispatch makes this part of the order with which the General inaugurated his su preme command the subject of a most earnestly preme command the subject of a most earnestly written appeal.

No strenger proof could be afforded than this in vocation ad misericordium of "the class" of deserter that the war, on the part of the South, has reached that stage of impulessness at which war is wicked. It is remarkable, too, that the Richmond Dispatch warns the said "class" that the Yankees are determined to fight Mexico and England, and that the troops for the purpose will be drawn from the "compared South" if the Federals succeed in reuniting the States.

FRIDAY, MARCH 11 1965.

Our friends will see that we have increased the cize of our paper. It has four additional umns of matter. It has not been large enough hitherto to accommodate our adver tising customers and at the same time leave us unicient room for editorial and other articles. We rejoice in the amount of advertising done here, for there can be no better evidence of a city's prosperity.

Our advertisers may now make as big a rush upon us as they please. If our present limits ere not enough for them, we can enlarge again. We shall be very glad to have a friendly compe tition with them in this way.

Each one of the four pages of the Journal is highly valuable for advertising. The first has telegraphic despatches, war letters, important documents, and other intereding matter; the second contains the principal editorial articles; the third gives the local intelligence and the very latest news by telegraph: and the fourth, when there is room, has editorial miscellany and other matter that not a few readers think the most attractive in the paper. So, no matter upon what page a customer has his advertise ment, he will find it in a conspicuous place. Be the body of the Journal as large as it may, we shall take care to make the soul con respondingly large.

The following is part of a telegraphic lespatch, published in another column under late, Washington, March 29:

The Intergence of to day says: "We learn from a source entitled to all credit from one who has access to intelligence in possess in of the Government, that the substance of the facts detailed by the New York Tribune in the late polylication regarding the weakness of the rebellion as evinced by the testimony of headers, is entirely true."

General Lee; reposes for the pacification of the two sections:

He (Mr.: ens) looks from any further effort by the Considerate Government toward negot stime, or to carry on the war, as intregand; just to the people and the States. In a word, he considers the fin tions of the Confederate Government at an end.

Step heme proposed:

First, Let President Lim in the an address to the army and poot e of the Suit embodying in that address what he has before said as to peace, and also what passed at his interview with the Commissioners.

Second. Agree to appoint Commissioners on the part of the United States to meet State Commissioners of the part of stime state commissioners of the part of stime state as desure to meet at M. He, Lour ville, or Geninari, in Air if or May, to conseit as to a peace on the base of the States returning to the Union Upon the sole condition of obselence to the Constitution and laws of the repulle.

Third, An one toon by such States as shall ind Commissioners to that convenity of sent read Representative to use the member of the Union tends to the part of the Union tends to the condition of North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and perhaps of South Carolina and Virginia. He was quite sure it would command the assent of at least six States. In present circum ances, he might reasonably hope it would be stimure generally adopted.

TAY RECEIVER-MR. D. M. PHERSON.-There two candidates for Tax Receiver, and McPherson is one of them. For several Wood's THEATER.—The Streets of New York is more of a drama shau a comedy. It intro-duces scenes and characters so natural and fa-miliar that we cannot fall to recognize them. ears he was Rallroad Tax Collector in the Vestern District, and he discharged his duties miliar that we cannot fall to recognize them. The centrasts are striking, and every passage in the play recalls some well-known incident of life. The piece is popular because the scenes are such as transpire in our midst almost every d.y. The public cannot soon grow thred of the drama, with Frank Drew sustaining the character of Badger, who turns up in a new role almost every scene. Mr. Drew takes a benefit to-night, and the Streets of New York will be rejected. A more attractive bill could not be clered to the public, so of course he will be greeted with an overflowing house. ablic. If he is elected to fill the new office the dic, we are sure, will never have cause to reet their choice, for he is one of the most ext and upright of business men. All who know . McPherson are well aware that he is an unsching and unconditional Union man. He is ot a member of the League, or any other poal society, but the leading Union men of the ity, knowing him the roughly, will vote for and e their influence to elect him. The probabiles are that he will be elected, and to make trance doubly sure, we would urge his nds to vote early and work hard til the every vote will count. It is a very respon-

"Desolation" is touchingly beautiful, A beart swept by the storms of life discloses its serrowful wreck, and hides nothing. It shows the rent and mangled heart-core, and exhibits the gaping wounds as they leed afresh. Unhappy Married Prople —That the course of true love, before marriage, never runs smooth, is a truth well known; but it seems to be less generally understood, that the course of true love, after marriage, is equally liaise to perturbations. One reason of this, perhajs, is that fiterature has treated the sorrows of lovers seriously, while the trou les of married life have been the theme of satirists and humorists. A strange proceeding, this, on the part of literature: store the perplexities of lovers are generally brief and 'rivisl, and married differences are frequently to rivisl, and married differences are frequently to rivisl and blasting.

Our halfi of 1 'lief' answering correspondents has caused thou ands of troubled hearts to open to us the sad details of domestic misery, imparted to no one else. Wives and husbands tell us how ardently they loved, what happiness they expected, how cruelly they have been discendanted and disappointed. The future, that was bright with promise a little while ago, is now so black and threatening, that they see before them no prospect except to spend a life of repining and despair. They love one another still, and as warmly as ever they did, and vet they are miserable. It is to such as these that we venture, on the present occasion, to address a few observations.

And first, we may remark, for their comfort, that their care is may a such as the content of the true intention.

they are miserable. It is to such as these that we venture, on the present occasion, to address a few observations.

And first, we may remark, for their comfort, that their case is not singular, but common, and, perhaps, universal. It happens endoom that two human be larg acress exquisitely adapted to one another, by nature and education, that they can acquire the art of hiring happily together without both being compelled to make painful sacrifices of habit, taste, and feeling after the glow and delusion of the hone; moon are passed, each has to learn that the other has faults which were not perceived before; each has to discover that the other is a fallible and limited human being—not an angel, not a hero, not a saint. Each has acquired, in their previous course through life, a bundle of those sustinate things called habits, some of which are sure to seem unreasonable and unwise, and none of which are sure to seem unreasonable and unwise, and none of which are sure to seem unreasonable and unwise, and none of which are sure to seem unreasonable and unwise, and none of which are sure to seem unreasonable and unwise, and none of which are sure to seem unreasonable and unwise, and none of which are sure to seem unreasonable and unwise, and none of which the true spirit of friendly compromise, then opinions clash, and unless each of the mated two cherish the true spirit of friendly compromise, unhappiness is certain to follow quick upon the tunultaous jow of the espousal.

Generally, this spirit of mutual concession is not acquired immediately. The art of living together justly and jovouely is one which is intrinsically dependent of men throw little live. If a tenth part of the genius and toil which have been wasted upon questions of metaphysics, had been expended upon educating the laws relating to the human temper, we should by this time, probably, have reached important and definite principles, the knowledge of we chould greatly smooth the path that leads to married happiness.
